Editor's Picks

Dallas 13.5 over Phoenix

Take Phoenix. Dallas looked sloppy in the second half against the Giants and Phoenix is due. The Cardinals would be a playoff contender in any other division. The Cowboys, however, just won two important intra-division games past and will look Pheonix.

* * Intramurals: A Way Out

by Hal Coffey The Collegian

With all of the stress of class schedules and deadlines, students need an activity where they can just let go and enjoy themselves. a place to compete in sports that they have and have not previously participated in.

Luckily, we here at Penn State-Behrend have Intramural Coordinator, Robert Wittman, and an array of nineteen different sports to choose among. From sports available on the varsity level, such as tennis and volleyball, to ping pong and badminton, each sport gives a person different opportunities to either find their personal niche, or just something which they can enjoy.

This year, with the introduction of the "All Year Trophy Point System", fraternities, sororities, residence halls have the chance to compete and receive a degree of pride and comradery. The basic idea behind this is that for each sport, a team or individual can earn points through fulfillment of their schedule, per game victories. placements into finals, runner-up, and championships. At the end of the year, each subdivision winning team will receive a trophy.

While meeting other students. participants also compete with the faculty and staff. This enables us to see professors outside of the classroom and compete with them. Rob believes that this will give some students a better understanding of their teachers on a more personal level.

Although most sports have had high participation rates, Rob is hoping that other sports pick up the pace, specifically cross country and most female events. Even though female participation is high in team sports, he would like to see more involvement in more individualized events which are available.

Rob knows that the incentive, trophies and sport champion Tshirts, will lure more students in, he hopes that everyone will get a better sense of teamwork and sportsmanship in a social atmosphere through the intramural program.

With softball, tennis and golf already in full swing, while cross country, football, and billiards right down the road, this years intramural program looks to be one of the best around.
