

Lewis is The Last of the Mohicans

by Jennifer Toubakaris
The Collegian

Adventure, romance, suspense, and incredible music—this movie has it all! The Last of the Mohicans snowballed all of these film qualities together in a movie that would make the most unemotional viewer spring a leak.

This historical story takes place in 1757, when the English are battling the French to keep a hold of their colonies.

On the side of the French is the Huron Indians, a war party of the tribe led by the savage, and I would also say psychotic, Magua. This is one crazy Indian! He is a blood thirsty (and I mean that literally) avenger of his family against "The Grey Hair."

"The Grey Hair" is the British officer, General Monroe. He and his troops are stationed at Fort McHenry and are in dire need of some reinforcements or the fort will fall to the hands of the French.

He has two beautiful daughters named Cora and Alice. Alice is the timid and cute little "daddy's girl" and Cora is the fiery brunette that falls in love with Nathaniel.

Where should I begin to describe Nathaniel? Well, he's the adopted son of the Mohican tribe and is absolutely handsome! Standing about six feet tall and having the most incredible body

I've ever seen; he really grabs your attention! He has these piercing eyes that I swear could melt icebergs. It's no wonder that Cora falls head over heels for him!

Nathaniel's feelings for Cora are little more discreet. Like the typical male he delivers some sassy lines to her to let her know he's in charge, like "Miss Monroe, they aren't strangers and they stay as they lay."

Duncan, one of the British officers, is hopelessly in love with Cora. He keeps on pursuing her affection and tries to keep Cora and Nathaniel apart as best he can. But the fireworks between them are too hot to extinguish. Finally, after what seems an eternity, they get together. But what happens in any movie right after two characters find each other; they lose each other.

Nathaniel is sentenced to be hung because he helped some soldiers escape from the fort. Cora goes to see him in his jail cell and tells him that, "The whole world's on fire." I'm not quite sure if she meant the fort or herself, but at any rate it was a good line.

Nathaniel escapes being hung after the Hurons raid the British troops and Nathaniel, Cora, Alice, and Duncan begin a journey by canoe through some of the most breathtaking scenery ever.

The music to accompany the film, by Trevor Jones, is reason enough to see this movie. It was fantastic, it sent chills up and down my spine! Two thumbs up for Trevor Jones.

Cora and Nathaniel once again get separated when he leaves her at a waterfall. Don't worry, it's not that he doesn't love her anymore. He leaves because the Hurons are closing in on them. They hate the Mohicans, so Nathaniel fears they will kill Cora if they find her with him.

He delivers the best line of the movie when he tells Cora, "Don't worry, I will find you. Stay alive. No matter where you are or how far I must travel, I will find you!" How could you not believe someone after saying something like that?

I would tell you about the rest of the movie but the ending is the best part. It really throws you a string of exciting events that you are just going to have to see for yourself.

The Last of the Mohicans is definitely a movie you don't want to miss. My advice is to see it while it is at the theater, because television will surely take away from the scenery and battle scenes depicted on the big screen. As for the girls, you know what your reason is for seeing this picture!
